

RULES WE FOLLOW

Without rules and guidelines all human advancement would dive into confusion, as there would be nothing shielding us from each other's most essential self-serving senses, and sometimes reckless propensities. Most of the times, basic standards and guidelines shield us from ourselves, for example, not contacting a hot heater or passing through a convergence when the light is red. In the event that we take a gander at laws of the street one can rapidly perceive what number of pulverizing mishaps would happen (and what number of lives would be demolished) if nobody kept the standards of the street. Without the most extreme consideration to observe these principles, things that could undoubtedly be forestalled may occur, bringing about negative things.

Rules do set up a general public. Without rules and regulation we would be living in a type of political agitation, a general public where each one could simply do what they needed to without stressing over outcomes. Rules do build up a feeling of responsibility – to one another, to the neighbors, to the legislature – without rules we would just be a lot of beasts.

In Islam, the sharia contains the rules by which a Muslim society is organized and governed, and it provides the means to resolve conflicts among individuals and between the individual and the state.

"The command is for none but for Allah: He has commanded that ye obey none but Him: That is the right path:"

Islam has set rules and regulations in order to ensure just and peaceful Islamic society. The citizens of an Islamic State are required to follow certain rules and to perform certain duties such as to pay taxes and not to misappropriate States' funds, and to participate in Jihad in any capacity for which they are deemed fit by the authorities of the Islamic State.

So far as the duties of the Islamic State are concerned, the first and foremost duty is to protect the life, property and honor of every citizen by following the set rules and regulations by the state, irrespective of cate, creed, color, religion or social status.

Through Quran and life of Holy Prophet Peace Be Upon Him, we came to know that, there are certain rules and regulations to do things and to perform holy tasks, for example Holy Prophet Peace Be Upon Him, has told us ways and rules to perform Salah. It has been narrated in a tradition that the Holy Prophet Peace Be Upon Him, the Blessings of Allah be upon him and his family, saw a man one day in his Mosque praying without completing his bowing and his prostration. Then, the Holy Prophet Peace Be Upon Him, the Blessings of Allah be upon him and his family, said: He had died with this prayer; he would never have died with my religion!

Rules are made to encourage the smooth working of society. Rules are likewise made to keep up consistency in different spheres of life. Along these lines rules are significant and must be followed so as to keep up the peace of the general public.

For example, traffic rules ensure smooth flow of traffic without danger of any accident. These rules keep the traffic streaming unreservedly by helping drivers arrive at their destinations and telling them passage, exit and turn focuses ahead of time. Traffic signs tell drivers of guidelines, give notice to possible perils on or close to the roadway, and give required direction to goals.

The recent example that elaborates the importance of following rules is the situation in COVID-19. If we follow the rules given by World Health Organization, most chances are that we will be protected by this pandemic. Avoidance of such rules like wearing masks in public gathering, maintaining social distance etc. will cost our own life. So, in order to be safe and sound, it is important to obey the rules and regulations.

It is important to remember that when rules are appropriately set and followed, they give a steady situation and human conjunction in a network, bringing about harmony and peace.
