Read the passage carefully and answer the questions 1 to 5 that follows.

In the search for a suitable means of communicating, ancient Egyptians began using letter forms (also known as logographs) as early as 4,000 B.C. It has come to be known as Hieroglyphics. Some of the earliest writings of the Egyptians have been discovered etched onto clay pots and tablets, and later, on papyrus.

The Egyptians established an entire language using symbols, much in the way that we use the alphabet today. Hieroglyphics were also largely phonetic-based, and often had sounds and individual letters. Though there are only a few parallels between our symbols and theirs, the idea is the same. An individual symbol (when agreed upon) can stand for a solitary thought, and it works. You're doing it right now. The Egyptians (it's worth noting) also used a number of animals (vultures, snakes, cattle, cats, fish, etc.) as well as everyday objects (bowls, axes, baskets, boats and feathers, etc.) when creating the imagery for their alphabet.

Hieroglyphics were originally intended to be used in religious writings (the word Hieroglyphics translates as sacred engraving), but became a widely accepted form of communication amongst common people as well.
